

REALLY, REALLY SIMPLE

"Sufficiently advanced technology is indistinguishable from magic"

– Arthur C Clarke

Every industry has its unique practices that are more or less common in different companies. A vertical product for an industry should have the functionality to automate the unique practice with little effort while providing flexibility to implement the other functionalities as needed. Such products reduce the implementation time largely thereby ensuring a better ROI compared to any other products / technologies. The most important requisite for developing industry specific vertical products is the domain knowledge and not software development skills. This translates into lesser dependency on software programmers and greater power to domain experts. Custom made application can now be built in a short time with lesser effort by only defining the process structures without writing complex code. Any change to the application can be incorporated just by modifying the process structures and not by changing any code. (In fact, as mentioned earlier, there are no codes involved here.)

Agile provides that independency, simplicity and advanced technology.

THEY SAY SO...

"We have been associated with Agile earlier and recommend their services very highly. It would be no exaggeration to say that Agile Labs has been instrumental in our success so far and we are confident that the continuation of our association means faster growth based on a secure technology platform."
